armcor has deep roots in the federal government contractor community and has access to a vast reservoir of expertise in the Greater Metropolitan Washington, DC Area and beyond, including Congressional staff members, retired military officers, former contracting officers, lobbyists, administrative law attorneys, accountants, tax professionals, regulators, industry insiders, subject-matter experts, private equity providers, and well-connected business professionals.

Through its strategic partners, armcor can provide contract administration, proposal writing, GSA, MOBIS, and other MAS submissions, SBIR grant request preparation, requests for modification of contract or multiple award schedule terms, marketing assistance, and representation to legislative and executive oversight entities. In some circumstances, armcor can also facilitate teaming with other contractors to make client products and services available under existing contracting vehicles.

armcor is positioned to provide firms based outside the Capital Beltway with a local Washington, DC presence, along with options for just-in-time project staffing and administrative support.

armcor also works with a number of attorneys in the Commonwealth of Virginia and the District of Columbia who can incorporate and properly maintain new U.S. subsidiaries for companies headquartered outside the country.

For construction contractors finding it difficult to secure performance bonds required by the Army Corps of Engineers, HUD, and other agencies, armcor can help to arrange surety bonding and project oversight.
