Special Projects

As a spinoff of a federal contractor responsible for managing and collecting hundreds of millions of dollars of invoices, armcor's corporate heritage includes deep understanding of the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) and adept navigation of the federal bureaucracy.

We possess the critical capabilities and creativity necessary to secure contract receivables as collateral in even the most challenging situations, and this allows us to entertain large transactions with characteristics and complexities that pose obstacles for other financial institutions. With proprietary systems and a proven ability to collect from the U.S. Government, we welcome such transactions and see them as a perfect match for our unique skill set, experience, and technical capabilities.

- We are also willing and able to work with contractors supporting U. S. forces stationed in war zones or other areas of civil unrest where our troops need logistics, security, energy, war materiel, and all types of supplies for mission-critical systems and activities.

- Portfolio concentration is not a problem.

- Complications due to domicile issues and choice of law can be overcome. In addition to those organized in the U.S., its territories, or Canada, contractors based elsewhere can usually be accommodated.

- Transactions involving multiple steps or layers of complexity are not disqualified. Our established procedures and our understanding of the collateral make large, complex opportunities feasible.

- As long as the U. S. Government is the account debtor, even construction projects are eligible for factoring—and in some cases we can work with large prime contractors to make factoring available to subcontractors.

- Accommodations can also be made when required by intelligence contracts with sensitive information; armcor only needs to secure its rights as Assignee.

We provide cash flow solutions where others fear to operate; we fashion deals from what others see as puzzles.
